Abstract
Key objective of companies is to earn profit and to fulfill this objective companies use society in different ways. So it is their ethical duty to participate in the development of society, where they belong. Companies have realized that, to get strategic benefits and ensure continuation of business, they have to focus on public welfare and reduce social inequalities. Thus they have to be more concern about society and common people. CSR is a means to corporate houses to work for society and create value for stakeholders. J.R.D. Tata rightly said that, “No success or achievement in material terms is worthwhile unless it serves the needs or interests of the country and its people.” The aim of this paper is to see the CSR initiatives taken by selected Indian companies and whether the companies are compliance with the Companies Act. 2013, regarding amount spend for CSR purpose.

Key words: - Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR), Society, Stakeholders, Indian Companies.

Introduction
CSR can be defined as the responsibility of a company to the society’s welfare in form of different activities. The stakeholders of a company are obviously interested about the company’s financial performance, but now-a-days they are keen and proud to know what the company’s contributions to the society are. CSR also works as a medium to create brand image to the corporate houses. In India, there is a large development gap between the cities and rural areas and large financial gap between the upper class and poor people. Government works to reduce these gaps by implementing different plans and policies. But only Government’s participation in social development is not enough, so more stakeholders need to involve and here the corporate entities have an important role to use their resources for the social development. In early days, the concept of CSR was limited within the philanthropic approach, but now-a-days the companies are performing their social duties with innovative ideas and methods. For example- Proctor and Gamble has launched the project ‘Shiksha’, where company spend a part of price of its products in this project to educate the children in India.

As per Companies Act. 1956, it was very difficult to the stakeholders to know how much amount companies spend for CSR purpose, because there was no provision in Companies Act. 1956, to mention about it. Many companies did not mention about their social performance and the amount they had spent on this issue. So to eliminate this problem, there is a provision in the Companies Act. 2013, where, as per Section 135, “every company having net worth of rupees 500 crore or more, or turnover of rupees 1000 crore or more or a net profit of rupees 5 crore or more during any financial year shall constitute a Corporate Social Responsibility Committee of the Board consisting of three or more directors, out of which at least one director shall be an independent director. The CSR Committee shall formulate and recommend Corporate Social Responsibility Policy which shall indicate the activity or activities to be undertaken by the company as specified in schedule VII and shall also recommend the amount of expenditure to be incurred on CSR activities. The Board of every company shall ensure that the company spends in every financial year at least 2% of the average net profits of the company made during the three immediately preceding financial years in pursuance of its CSR policy. Where the company fails to spend such amount, the Board shall in its report specify the reasons for not spending the amount. The approach is to ‘comply or explain’. The company shall give preference to local areas where it operates, for spending amount earmarked for CSR activities. According to Schedule-VII of Companies Act 2013, the following activities can be included by companies in their CSR Policies:-
• Eradicating extreme hunger and poverty,
• Promotion of education,
• Reducing child mortality and improving maternal health,
• Combating human immunodeficiency virus, acquired immune deficiency syndrome, malaria and other diseases,
• Promoting gender equality and empowering women,
• Ensuring environmental sustainability,
• Social business projects,
• Create employment by enhancing vocational skills,
• Contribution to the Prime Minister’s National Relief Fund or any other fund set by the Central Government or the State Governments for socio-economic development and relief and funds for the welfare of the Scheduled Caste, the Scheduled Tribes, other backward classes, minorities and women, and • Such other matters as may be prescribed”.

Objectives of the Study
This study has been carried out with the following two specific objectives:-
• To study the initiatives taken by the selected Indian companies in the ground of CSR.
• To analyze whether the selected companies are compliance with the Companies Act. 2013 regarding the amount spends for CSR purpose.

Literature Review

Carroll (1979) defined that there are four types of responsibilities which a company has to fulfill, namely-“economic, legal, ethical and discretionary responsibilities”. In Economic responsibility, a firm has to focus on profit earning for its shareholders. In legal responsibility, the firm should follow the rules, regulations imposed by government while doing business. Ethical responsibility refers to the activities of the management without partiality, and finally discretionary responsibility is the moral duty of the companies to contribute for the social development. S. Pradhan and A. Ranjan (2010) examined the CSR initiatives of Indian companies in rural development and came to the conclusion that companies have realized social and economic growth of the local communities is a big issue for doing business in an efficient way and they are engaged with different kinds of social activities in rural areas for better social and economic growth. A.K. Srivastava, G. Negi, V. Mishra and S. Pandey (2012) examined the CSR performance of TATA group and concluded that TATA group is performing its duty and responsibility towards the nation in an efficient way. N. Singh, R. Srivastava and R. Rastogi (2013) analyzed the CSR practices of selected banks and they concluded that the banks are performing their CSR activities in an efficient manner. V.L. Govindarajan, N.V. Kumar and N. Purusothaman (2013) attempted to see whether there is any linkage between the CSR initiatives and financial and stock market performances of the companies and they concluded that CSR score and stock market performance are positively correlated for selected companies. T.S. Mundhe (2013) conducted the research on impact of Indian ethos and CSR of selected Indian companies, where the result shows that Indian ethos help to the Indian companies to realize their social performance and the CSR activities of the selected companies have a great role in development. P.D. Sawant (2014) analyzed CSR practices, initiatives and expenditures of selected pharmaceutical companies in India. The result shows that the companies have taken different initiatives to discharge their social duties. Dr. Reddy’s Laboratories Ltd. was the only entity which spent near 2% of its average net profits of the preceding three years (i.e. 2009-10, 2010-11 and 2011-12); while no other entity was close to this percentage. J.A. Bhat and Dr. N.Z. Qureshi (2014) investigated the CSR initiatives of selected life insurance companies in India and they came to the conclusion that life insurance sector is contributing in social development by implementing various projects. H.A. Khan, A. Zahooor and S. Irum (2014) attempted to find out the impacts of CSR on employees’ behavior in telecom sector of Pakistan, where they concluded that CSR activities has the great role on employees’ performance level. CSR initiatives help the employees’ to feel proud and make them more committed towards the organization. N. Guruvaiah and M.B. Rao analyzed the role of corporate organizations in social development, where they observed that 62% of manufacturing companies focused on CSR activities in terms of environmental concern, as manufacturing units damage the environment by different ways and 72% of service organizations paid attention on different social issues, besides, it had been seen that there is a positive relation between the amount of CSR spent and the performance of the companies.

Conclusions

The conclusion can be drawn that, CSR has a great importance in today’s business environment for socio-economic developments and to contribute to the value of stakeholders. The selected Indian companies have taken several initiatives for socio-economic development in the way of CSR. But that is not enough. The above table clearly shows that only two companies (namely- Dabur India Limited & Emami Limited) have compliances with the provision of Companies Act. 2013 for amount spending for CSR purpose, but remaining companies failed to spent 2% of their average net profit of last three years for CSR purpose in the F.Y. 2014-2015. So they have to be taken more initiatives to fulfill their social commitments.
