LipoLift®: An introduction to a neurovascular-sparing breast lift and reduction technique

Jaime S Schwartz
Cleveland Clinic, USA
Keck School of Medicine of USC, USA

Schwartz created the LipoLift® breast procedure to provide patients with a safer, less-invasive, breast lift and reduction option. As the pioneer of the LipoLift® technique, Dr Schwartz has given lectures across the United States and even appeared on television programs like the doctors TV show to discuss this revolutionary procedure. Similar to a traditional breast reduction, the LipoLift® can make the breasts smaller, but it differs in its ability to leave more of the natural blood and nerve supply intact. The LipoLift® procedure uses liposuction of the lower and outer portions of the breasts, eliminating the parts of the breast that most women are dissatisfied with the sides and bottom while preserving upper-pole fullness. This technique allows Dr. Schwartz to blend and remove axillary and lateral tissue while at the same time effectively moving tissue from the bottom to the top, which makes the breasts more attractive. LipoLift® is minimally invasive and patients typically don't lose any nipple sensitivity with LipoLift® and most state that they even have hypersensitivity of the nipples following surgery. LipoLift® is ideal for improving breast symmetry, as the technique provides far greater precision than other breast techniques, which allows Dr. Schwartz to make subtle changes that dramatically impact the appearance of the breasts. This advanced technique is less invasive, safer if someone needs a revision breast reduction and just as effective as other breast lift and reduction techniques.

Biography

Jaime S Schwartz is a Member of the American Society of Plastic Surgeons and a Diplomat of the American Board of Plastic Surgery. He is widely known for fixing some of the most complex breast surgery problems in the industry and is considered the surgeon that other plastic surgeons turn to for education on aesthetic and reconstructive surgery.
