Continuous improvement is the objective of all enterprises, but larger companies remain mired in inertia. In fact, the bigger they are, the more they are likely to do the same things over and over, and the slower they are to shift with the changing tides of the larger economy. So it is fair to say that inertia is the enemy of agility. Organizations are only growing more reliant on data, and that data is flowing at a fire-hose pace. Companies can no longer respond in a timely fashion without a radical paradigm shift. To be a global leader, an organization must conquer inertia by harnessing today's massive computing power with the human mind's great ability to reduce massive data to actionable understanding. By embracing this change, enterprises will not only lower costs, improve efficiencies and boost revenues and profits in the near term, but they will also nurture continuous improvement to thrive far into the future. Business Excellence... begins with Business Transformation and the change has to be embraced from the executive c-suite through all levels of the organization. Use your business excellence analytics platform to enable your employees to achieve strategic objectives.
